Friday night's Maxim party, presented by Talent Resources Sports, was one of the hottest tickets in town, with Justin Bieber kicking off Super Bowl weekend in NYC by spending more than three hours at the blowout bash.

A source tells gossipdavid.com that Bieber arrived with about 15 friends (neither his manager Scoter Braun nor his dad Jeremy Bieber were with him) at 12:45 a.m., and stayed until a bit after 4 a.m. Bieber, who at 19 is under the legal drinking age of 21, refrained from drinking alcohol says the source, adding he stuck to drinking Aqua Hydrate, one of the party's sponsors. (Other sponsors included Heavenly Resorts, Wonderful Pistachios, Touch By Alyssa Milano And Philippe Chow.)

The source adds that there were 9 security guards surrounding Bieber's table. When anyone tried to take a photo of the table, the guards promptly shined their flashlight at the camera.

And Justin did not seem happy that he was denied entry to three other events that evening. Says the source: "Justin was in a bad mood, it was obvious. Justin wanted to go out, and not stay in He was actually very behaved for the first two hours. As the early morning progressed you could see him having a good time, and was talking with girls. He did had some yelling match with a friend about something, which made it clear he was not in a good mood."

Party-goers chowed down on fare from Philippe by Philippe Chow, which created specially-curated menu personally created by Chef Philippe Chow, with dishes including Chicken Satay, Vegetable Dumplings and Shrimp Satay.
